Joshua G. Singer is a corporate transactional and regulatory attorney who focuses his practice on navigating healthcare and life sciences regulatory compliance, transactional, and licensing issues. He has extensive experience assisting clients with complex corporate matters and ensuring compliance with state laws and municipal regulations. Josh serves as Vice Chair of the Healthcare Practice Group and also co-manages Leech Tishman's Los Angeles operations.

Josh's transactional experience includes counseling on mergers and acquisitions, financing, securities, formation, governance, sale and purchase, and licensing. He assists clients in navigating complex transactions involving private equity and the acquisition or sale of practices and offices, having recently counseled a number of clients in the sale of their practices to a large California-based hospital.

Josh possesses a wealth of knowledge regarding health and wellness products and services, including FDA matters, offering greater depth in strategy and thoughtful options for clients, along with healthcare corporate transactional, business formation, behavioral health licensing, ambulatory surgery centers, physician practice compliance, and tax counsel. He holds a Tax LL.M. degree, making him uniquely qualified to advise on federal and state tax liabilities and strategies to minimize tax obligations.

Josh has also assisted clients within the cannabis industry to obtain applicable licenses and permits that allow them to legally operate their medicinal and recreational-use businesses. He provides guidance regarding everchanging laws and conflicts between federal and state regulations and municipal ordinances that govern cannabis manufacturers, cultivators, retailers, distributors, investors, and ancillary services. Josh is intimately familiar with the nuanced California state laws governing the multi-million-dollar legalized cannabis industry, particularly in the Greater Los Angeles area.
